The debate around immigration reform can be divisive, controversial and emotional. But if we boil it down to the basics and ask ourselves what we as a nation, gain from:

• uprooting hardworking individuals from their jobs and communities, tearing them away from their families?
• a system that forces millions of workers into an underground economy, making them vulnerable to exploitation, wage theft and obscene underpayment by unscrupulous employers?
• denying millions of workers – who are consumers and taxpayers – an immigration status that could mean higher wages, more taxes and a greater contribution to the economy?

The answer is nothing. We gain nothing by maintaining the status quo. If anything, we lose: families are ripped apart, communities disrupted, workplace standards and wages plummet for all workers, and we miss out on a potential billion-dollar revenue source. (Check out the recent report from the Center for American Progress: The Economic Effects of Granting Legal Status and Citizenship to Undocumented Immigrants)

The time to overhaul our broken and inhume immigration system is now. As people of faith who recognize and honor the social and economic contributions made by our immigrant brothers and sisters, we have an opportunity to help make comprehensive immigration reform finally happen.

Over the last few months, IWJ along with the Interfaith Immigration Coalition, Alliance for Citizenship, United Workers Congress, and other allies, has been working to bring together people of faith in support of immigration reform. IWJ affiliates around the country have been busy organizing prayer vigils, leading delegations to their representatives and facilitating immigration reform discussions within congregations and community groups.

It’s going to be a very busy summer. We have a small window of opportunity to let our elected officials know that passing real and humane immigration reform is not optional. It must be done and it must be done now. So, if we want to win fair and humane immigration reform this time around, we must all pitch in to make it happen! Here’s what you can do:

• Start a postcard drive in your congregation: download immigration reform postcards at www.iwj.org, collect signatures and mail the cards to your representatives.
• Educate people in your congregation or community group about the importance of immigration reform. Check out IWJ’s statement of principles on immigration reform.
• Encourage your congregation to display a “Welcome the Immigrant” banner outside your place of worship. Email info@iwj.org for more information.
• Plan to participate in May Day rallies and actions on May 1.
• Organize a prayer vigil. Resources available at www.iwj.org.
• Subscribe to IWJ’s action alerts and find out when emergency actions, events and delegations are planned in your area.

We’ve Got the Goods

Thanks to the good work of IWJ board members, interns, faith leaders and allies on the ground, we continue to broaden our resource offerings that highlight the sacred intersection of faith and labor. In the last six months, we’ve introduced a series of seasonal reflections that we hope you found useful. We’ve also developed toolkits and guides to help congregations and individuals understand important issues that impact working families. Issues like immigration reform, wage theft and minimum wage. For prayers, bulletin inserts, bible studies, organizing toolkits, visit www.iwj.org/resources. If you would like to see a particular resource developed, please email info@iwj.org.

Moving Forward to End Wage Theft

Our affiliate network is knee deep in work to end wage theft, pushing for state and local legislation that is tough on employers who steal from their workers.

Great News in Chicago!

In January, the City Council in Chicago unanimously passed an anti-wage theft ordinance (one of strongest in the country.) ARISE Chicago, an IWJ affiliate, worked with Alderman Pawar (47th Ward) to develop the ordinance. Chicago is now the largest city in the country with such an ordinance.

The new ordinance could revoke business licenses for employers found guilty of wage theft. Worker advocates say the new ordinance will protect vulnerable workers and promote ethical business practices across the city.

“We now have to work on enforcement,” ARISE organizer Jorge Mujica told IWJ staff after the ordinance passed.

According to a report from the University of Illinois-Chicago’s Center for Urban Economic Development, employers steal an estimated $7.3 million of workers’ wages every week in Cook County alone.

Winning campaigns like those in Chicago, Broward and Miami-Dade counties in Florida, and the state of Texas, pave the way for ordinances in other communities that are working toward building awareness and urgency around solving a problem that affects so many people.

Justice for Retired Miners

Interfaith Worker Justice joins faith communities across the country in calling on Patriot Coal executives to protect the healthcare benefits and pensions of retired Peabody Energy union coal miners.

In 2007, Peabody Energy created Patriot Coal to take over most of Peabody’s healthcare and pension obligations.

Now, Patriot is seeking to reorganize under Chapter 11 bankruptcy. As a part of their restructuring, leaders from Patriot seek to terminate benefits in the union contract for more than 20,000 retired Peabody miners who never worked a day at Patriot Coal.

“It’s awful that these workers might lose their healthcare benefits after working all their life for Peabody,” said IWJ’s Kim Bobo. “It’s really unimaginable the suffering of some of these miners would experience without their healthcare.”

Mineworkers have one of the most dangerous jobs in the country, and they rely on the good healthcare benefits in their union contract. Miners like William Rogers, who needs a constant stream of oxygen to survive after contracting black lung working for Peabody, are at risk.

People of faith and labor advocates are organizing to support these workers.

More than 90 faith leaders and people of faith signed an open letter urging the corporation’s leaders to protect the pensions and healthcare benefits promised in the Peabody contract.

Over the last couple of months, miners, labor activists and people of faith in St. Louis (where Peabody and Patriot are headquartered) have supported retired miners at actions and marches during the bankruptcy proceedings. Many miners have been arrested at peaceful demonstrations in St. Louis.

IWJ recently launched a new pilot program, the VITA Wage Theft project. It is a joint initiative with the Center for Economic Progress, which coordinates the Volunteers in Tax Assistance (VITA) program in Chicago, the Illinois Department of Labor, the National Lawyers Guild and Interfaith Worker Justice. Volunteers interview tax filers to identify cases of wage theft and help them file Department of Labor claims or connect them to a lawyer to recover their stolen wages. IWJ hopes to expand the program to the thousands of VITA sites across the nation. To learn more about the program, email info@iwj.org,

Onward & Upward! Building Power for Today’s Workers

The IWJ Worker Center Network is proud to welcome its 27th member, the Center for Worker Justice of Eastern Iowa (CWJEI). CWJEI aims to unite low-wage workers in Eastern Iowa across race and immigration status to achieve social and economic justice through education, organizing, direct services and community alliances. Like a majority of WCN members, CWJEI will work on pushing for better wage and hour enforcement in Iowa. The Center is an offshoot of the Immigrant Voices Project, which brought together area immigrants and activists to address community concerns. To learn more about the WCN, visit www.iwj.org/worker-center-network.

Raise your voice for a Living Wage!

IWJ joins faith communities in supporting proposed legislation that would raise the minimum wage to $10.10 an hour. The bill, introduced by Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa) and Rep. George Miller (D-Calif.) also includes a crucial proposal to index the federal minimum wage according to inflation on a regular basis. This would assure that as the cost of living increases over time, the minimum wage would increase so as to keep pace with those costs. We invite you to join IWJ and its affiliates in pushing for this long-overdue increase in wages. Though $10.10 falls well below a genuine living wage, it’s a step in the right direction, and the indexing provision would be a great victory. To learn more about the minimum wage campaign, visit www.iwj.org.
As we go deeper into the campaign for comprehensive immigration reform, I often think about the massive immigration raid that tore the small town of Postville, Iowa apart.

In 2008, nearly 400 workers at Agriprocessors’ meatpacking plant were picked up by heavily armed ICE agents, detained in makeshift holding facilities and denied a fair judicial process. It was one of the largest single-worksite raids in history.

But even before the raid, many, if not all, workers and their families were already living on the edge of survival. They were abused, exploited and robbed of their wages by an employer who took advantage of their vulnerability.

What happened in Postville strongly symbolizes the unresolved and interconnected issues of immigration and justice for workers.

Five years after Postville, we now have an incredible opportunity to pass comprehensive immigration reform that protects workers’ rights and honors family unity.

We have a real shot at winning meaningful reform this time. BUT every person who stands on the side of justice must first get onboard! Will you support the work of interfaith worker justice with a gift today? Donate at http://bit.ly/investinjustice or use the enclosed envelope to mail in your gift.

As people of faith, we recognize and honor the social and economic contributions made by immigrant workers. When we allow immigrant workers to be exploited, we lower the standards for all workers. When workers and their families are exploited and torn apart, we all suffer as a result.

At this point in history, when worker rights and immigrant rights are one and the same, your gift to IWJ is an investment in the future of ALL workers. It’s an investment in your future and the future of your family.

2013 is a year of great potential. Aside from the growing momentum behind passing comprehensive immigration reform, we’re also seeing strong support for an increase in the federal minimum wage. On the local and state level, IWJ affiliates and allied groups are ratcheting up work around paid sick days and wage theft! (Please take time to read the articles in this issue of Faith Works to see how your support impacts the work of IWJ and its affiliate network.

You Rocked Black Friday!

The discounts were deep as ever; checkout lines, as long as you'd expect for the biggest shopping day of the year; and the droves of shoppers, massive as always. But there was also something starkly different about Black Friday 2012.

Outside more than a thousand Walmart stores across the country, communities of people of faith, workers, students, activists, neighbours gathered in support of striking Walmart store and supply chain workers. That’s more than 1,200 actions at Walmart stores in 47 states that YOU and others like you made happen!

IWJ affiliates and supporters led and participated in more than 100 of these actions around the country. We held prayer vigils, delegations to the management and flash mobs to bring attention to the plight of Walmart store and supply chain workers who are demanding better wages and safe working conditions.

Shortly after that Friday, Walmart announced plans to address scheduling issues, giving part-time workers enough hours to make them full-time, and in some stores, provide workers their schedules a week in advance. Those are major victories owed to the courage of Walmart workers and the support of community allies like you.

Actions are planned throughout the year. We’ll keep you posted. One thing’s for sure: we’ll make Black Friday 2013 even bigger, with actions at every Walmart store in the country. So start looking for a store near you! For more info, contact Sung Yeon Choi-Morrow at schoi-morrow@iwj.org or 312.513.2289

Northwest Arkansas Workers’ Justice Center staff are hopeful two state legislators will reintroduce a strong anti-wage theft bill for the 2013 legislative session. State Representatives Jon Woods and Greg Leding from Northwest Arkansas are working with the worker center to push the bill that would require employers to pay a penalty to former employees if wages are not paid and that would limit the wage deductions an employer can make without written authorization from the employee. It also requires workers be paid the next regular payday following termination or departure.

Arizona Interfaith Alliance for Worker Justice is also working on a wage theft ordinance in Phoenix.

Visit IWJ on the web for more information about wage theft, our affiliates or their local campaigns to stop wage theft in communities across the country.
